Google Celebrating Mystery Ahead Of Almanac Book Launch – Coincidence, or Conspiracy?

For the second time in September Google is celebrating unsolved mysteries on its home page. On September 4 it was UFO's; today it is crop circles. Has this been specifically timed with the launch of Almanac Of The Infamous, The Incredible, And The Ignored, the new compendium of the unexplained to be released October 1? Google isn't telling.

Almanac Of The Infamous, The Incredible, And The Ignored features 365 days of the world's most unexplained phenomena and unsolved mysteries. Both UFO's and crop circles figure prominently, although the book's scope covers the whole range of odd occurrences. Juanita Rose Violini, the Almanac's author, is vague about any professional relationship with Google. "Maybe we are, and maybe we aren't," was her only comment.

One thing is certain – the world needs reminding of how mysterious life really is. As Violini says, "It is amazing how much we miss, or even refuse to see, in our own lives. If everyone started their day with a dose of the unexplained, how much more might reveal itself to us?" The Almanac, and, it seems, Google, intend to help us find out.

Almanac of The Infamous, The Incredible, and The Ignored is published by Weiser Books, and goes on sale October 1, 2009. More information can be found at the Web addresses below, and by contacting the author.
